ABSTRACT

This 1968 edition of an annotated bibliography on the Negro American in paperback includes over 140 additional titles and omits several titles found in the previous edition. The list does not attempt to be comprehensive, and is intended as an aid and reference guide to teachers and students to broaden their background of information about Negro Americans. Books listed range from fiction suitable for seventh-graders to those books dealing with basic problems in American society of interest to college-bound senior high school students. For each of the approximately 330 titles listed, the following information is provided: author, title, publisher, copyright date, cost, a brief annotation, and a rating as to whether the item in question is suitable for high school students, junior high school students, or for both. A directory of the publishers of the items listed is also provided separately. (RJ)

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

This list has been developed by members of the staff of the History Department of the District of Columbia Public Schools and has been edited and published under the supervision of the Publications Division of the National Education Association.

Because of the increasing use of paperback books in teaching and because of the great demand for materials on Negro life and history, the Committee on Civil and Human Rights of Educators sponsored the first edition of the bibliography in 1967. This 1968 edition is sponsored by the successor to the Committee, the NEA Center for Human Relations. The revised edition omits several titles which were included in the 1967 edition and adds over 140 new titles.

We are especially grateful for the hours of work spent on the original edition in compiling and annotating by Joseph E. Penn, supervising director, Mrs. Elaine Brooks Wells, assistant director, and Mrs. Mollie L. Berch, assistant director—all of the Department of History of the District of Columbia Public Schools; to Dr. Sidney Dorros, director of the NEA Publications Division, for supervising publication arrangements; to Kirsten Carter of the NEA Publications Division for editorial and technical assistance; and to Ken Frye, also of the NEA Publications Division, for creating and designing the cover.

The Center for Human Relations appreciates the intensive work done during the summer of 1968 by Mrs. Mollie L. Berch in preparing the revisions and additions for the 1968 revised edition.

INTRODUCTION

The task of providing the knowledge and skills necessary for good human relations both in the classroom and in the community presents a great challenge and responsibility to all who have been entrusted with the education of our young.

Although the textbook is only one among many education tools, it is still an important one. Despite a growing need for all students to know and understand the role and contribution of Negro Americans to American life and culture, many textbooks continue either to ignore Negro Americans or to present them in a biased or distorted stereotype manner. Fortunately, however, there is a growing number of paperback books—relatively inexpensive and readily available to teachers, students, and parents—which can greatly help to remedy this inadequate treatment.

The following list is intended as an aid and reference guide to teachers and students who may have a limited background of information on the role and contributions of Negro Americans to the American way of life. Librarians also will find the list useful in helping students locate assigned materials, broaden their horizons, and enrich their reading experience. It is further hoped that parent-teacher organizations and other community groups will use this guide to recommend additions to family reading.

No attempt has been made to include all paperbound books written about Negro Americans. We have tried to select books which teachers can use for their own enrichment as well as can their students on the secondary school level. Books listed range from fiction that the reluctant reader on the seventh-grade level will enjoy to books dealing with basic problems in American society of interest to college-bound senior high school students. Classroom teachers of English and music and all other teachers who desire a selected reference guide will find this list useful.

Since so many books written on the Negro American are not geared to classroom use, it is imperative that the teacher carefully exercise his judgment in selecting and assigning the books that are to be used in his classroom to help students gain greater insights and deeper understandings. Some of the books listed will be helpful only in a limited area of study. Other books which have literary merit were omitted from this list because we felt that they were not suitable for a teaching-learning situation in a secondary school classroom. It is hoped that the proper use of this guide will lead to stimulating class activities, imaginative and creative thinking on the part of both teachers and students, and to a greater understanding of present-day social problems.

ANNOTATED LIST

Notes on the use of this list: To the right of each entry is a code which should be interpreted as follows: HS — suitable for high school students; JHS — suitable for junior high school students; SEC — suitable for both high school and junior high school students.
